Learning & Application Group for People in Leadership Roles within Religious Organisations

Learning & Application Group for Leaders:

This course seeks to explore the idea that for most of us there is little time to create the conditions to support our own personal and professional development. This is particularly true of professionals who are in jobs that require us to respond to the needs of others.

Religious and spiritual leaders have a particular role in our society with high public expectations that they are available at any time for anything.

This group will provide an opportunity to look at these expectations and demands. Exploration in a secure and contained environment can take place around ways of managing the difficult boundaries between the personal and the professional.

Who is eligible to take part?

Any person who fulfils a leadership role within any religious organisation.

The Group Consultants will be:

Romma Clements

Romma is an accredited counsellor and supervisor who has worked in a range of roles most recently as a counsellor at Glasgow University working with individuals and groups.

Joyce Watkinson

Joyce is an accredited counsellor and supervisor working within SIHR. She has recently been working as a teaching fellow helping to design and offer short courses in relationship based skills for social workers.

Anyone wishing to discuss taking part in the course is welcome to contact either consultant at SIHR.

The Scottish Institute of Human Relations
- understanding people -

Founded as an education trust in 1971, The Scottish Institute of Human Relations (SIHR) is a national resource that provides educational programmes and services. A national charity, it has premises in Edinburgh and Glasgow, with a wide network of practitioners and members.

Why choose SIHR?

Understanding human relationships is central to emotional health and well-being, but sustaining and applying that understanding in the work of promoting mental health or social well-being is very demanding. SIHR, in its role as an educational charity, develops and delivers courses and services for people who respond to such demands in their professional lives.

Our courses and services translate psychoanalytic, psychodynamic and systemic ideas into practical tools for professionals in the health service, voluntary and faith organisations, and education and social services.
